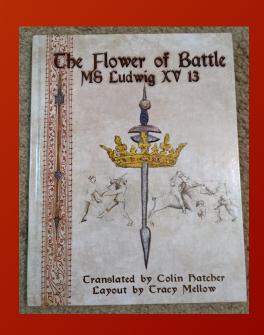

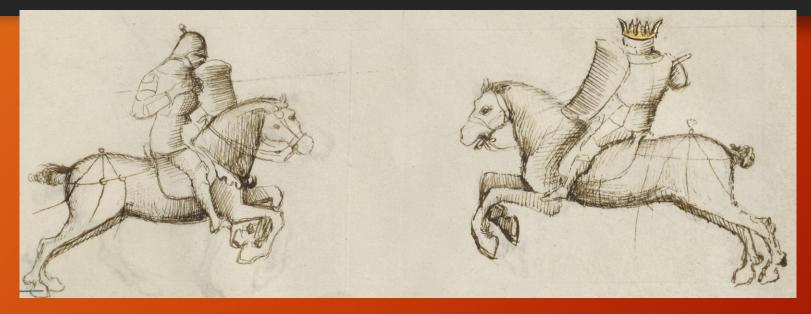

Plate 1: (41r-a) Boar's Tooth/Tusk

I carry my lance in the guard Boar's Tooth/Tusk, because I am well-armoured and have a shorter lance than my opponent. My intention is to beat his lance offline as I raise mine diagonally. And this will result in our lances crossing each other at about an arm's length from the point. My lance however will then run into his body, while his will pass offline far from me. And that is how this is done.

Plate 2: (41r-c) Counter Master

This is the counter to the previous play when one rides against another with sharp steel, but one has a shorter lance than the other. When he who has the shorter lance carries it low in the Boar's Tusk, then he with the longer lance should similarly carry his lance low, as drawn here, so that the short lance cannot beat aside the long lance.

Plate 3: (41v-b) Left Woman's Guard

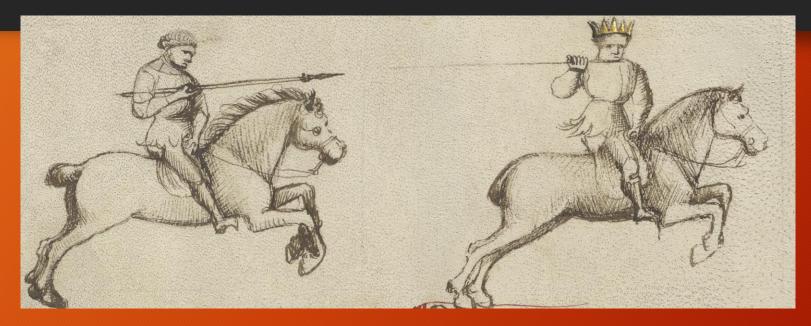

This is another way to carry your lance when fighting another lance. This Master has a short lance, so he carries it in Guard of the Lady on the left as you can see, so he can beat aside his opponent's weapon and strike him.

Plate 4: (41v-d) Left Woman's Guard

This Master also carries his lance in Guard of the Lady on the left, in order to knock aside the spear his opponent is about to throw at him. Just as he can beat it aside using his lance, so too he could beat it aside using a staff or a short sword.

Plate 5: (42r-b) Remedy Master

This master who is fleeing is not wearing armor and rides a horse built for speed, and as he flees he constantly throws his lance point behind him so as to strike at his opponent. And if were to turn his horse to the right he could quickly enter into the Boar's Tusk guard with his lance, or he could take the left side Guard of the Lady, to beat aside his opponent's weapon and finish him in similar fashion to the first and the third plays of the lance.

Plate 6: (42r-d) Sword v Lance Remedy Master

This method of carrying the sword against the lance is well suited for beating aside your opponent's lance when you are passing him on his right side. And this guard is effective against all hand held weapons, namely pole axe, staff, sword etc.

Plate 7: (42v-a) Counter Master

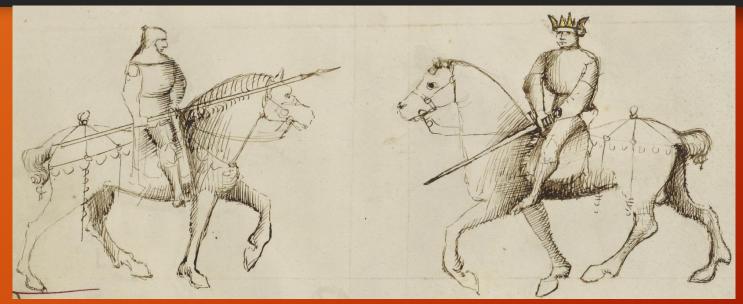

This is the counter to the previous play. This Master attacks with his lance held low in order to strike his opponent's horse either in the head or the chest, and the opponent will be unable to beat aside such a low attack with his sword.

Plate 8: (42v-d) Counter Master

This is another counter of lance versus sword. In this one, the man with the lance couches his lance under his left arm, so that his lance cannot be beaten aside. And in this way he will be able to strike the man with the sword with his lance.

Plate 9: (43r-b) Boar's Tooth/Tusk

Here the man with the sword awaits the man with the lance, and he is waiting in the Boar's Tusk guard. As the man with the lance approaches him, the Master with the sword beats aside the lance to the right side, covering and striking with one turn of the sword.

Plate 10: (43r-c) Counter Master

This is the counter to the preceding play of lance versus sword. Here the man with the lance strikes his opponent's (the man with the sword) horse in the head, because he cannot beat aside the lance with his sword since it is too low.

Plate 11: (43v-b) Long Tail Guard

This way of carrying the sword is named "the Long Tail Guard". When you are riding to your opponent's right side, this is a very good guard to use against the lance and all other hand held weapons. Keep firmly in your mind that thrusts and strikes from the left side should be beaten aside to your outside line, beating them diagonally upwards, not vertically. And the downward strikes should similarly be beaten aside to the outside, lifting your opponent's sword a little as you do so. You can make these plays as these drawings show.

Plate 12: (43v-d) Long Tail Guard

This version of the Long Tail Guard is a good guard when your opponent attacks you from his sword on his left shoulder, as this opponent is shown doing here. And be advised that this guard will work against all attacks from both the right and the left sides, and against anyone, whether right handed or left handed. Hereafter begin the plays from the Long Tail that always begin with beating aside the opponent's weapon, as you saw drawn in the first guard of the Long Tail.

Plate 13: (44r-a) 1st Student

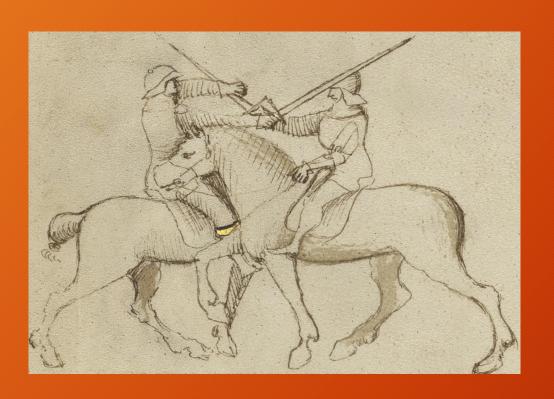

This is the first play that comes from the Long Tail Guard shown above. Here the Master beats aside his opponent's sword, and then places a thrust into his chest or his face, as you see drawn here.

Plate 14: (44r-b) 2nd Student

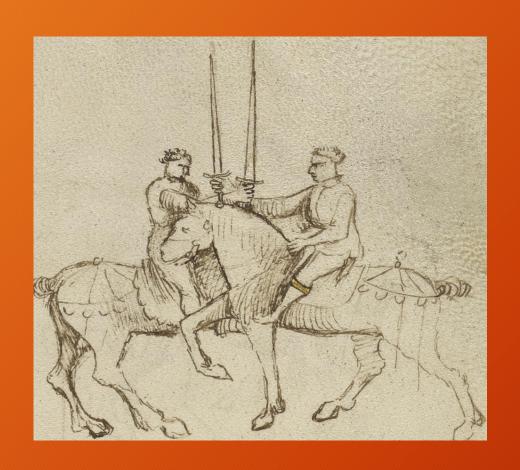

This is the second play that you can do after beating aside your opponent's weapon. Here I strike this man over the head, because I see his head is unarmored.

Plate 15: (44r-c) 3rd Student

This is the another play, the third, where, after beating aside your opponent's sword, you grab it with your left hand and strike him in the head. You could also strike him with a thrust.

Plate 16: (44r-d) 4th Student

This is the fourth play, in which the student strikes his opponent in the head and then takes his sword in the manner shown here.

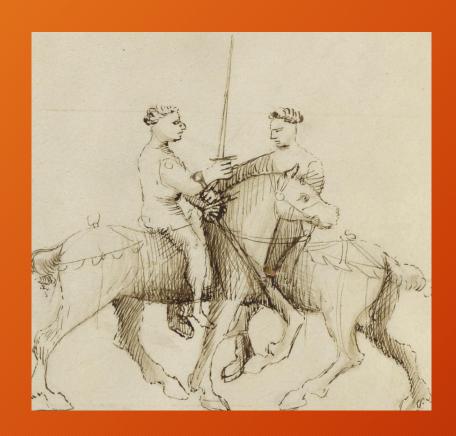

Plate 17: (44v-a) 5th Student & Counter

This is the fifth play that flows from the cover where you beat aside his sword. Here I throw my arm around his neck and turn quickly, and with the base of my sword I drive him to the ground.

My counter is the second play that follows me, but this counter will not work if your opponent is armored

Plate 18: (44v-b) 6th Student

This is the sixth play, where you take away your opponent's sword. You use the hilt of your sword to lift his hilt upwards, which will make his sword fall from his hands.

Plate 19: (44v-c) Counter Master to 5th Student

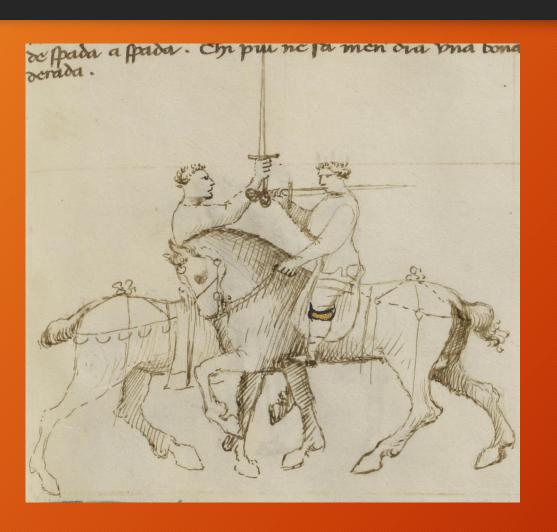

This is the seventh play, which is the counter to the fifth play above. It employs a strike to your opponent's leg. But if your opponent is armored, you can't trust this counter to work.

Plate 20: (44v-d) Counter Master to all preceding plays

This is the eighth play, which is the counter to all of the preceding plays, but especially the plays of the mounted sword when the masters are in the Long Tail guard. When the Masters or their students are in this guard, and when I strike or thrust at them, and when they quickly beat my attack aside, then I quickly turn my sword and strike them in the face with my pommel. Then I move quickly from my position and strike them in the back of the head with a horizontal backhand strike.

Plate 21: (45r-a) Counter-Counter Master

I am the ninth play, which is the counter to the counter that preceded me. When he turns his sword, I quickly place my hilt as you see drawn here, so that he cannot strike me in the face with his pommel. And if I raise my sword up, and turn it to the left, you could well have your sword taken away. And if I am unable to do that, I could instead strike you with a backhand strike to the face, or with a quick turn of my sword strike you in the head with my pommel. Here ends the plays of sword against sword on horseback. If you know more of this, please share it.

Plate 22: (45r-b) 1st Student of Grappling

This is a grappling play, that is a play of the arms, and this is how you do it: if your opponent is fleeing from you, you come up behind him to his left side. Now with your right hand grab the cheek piece of his bascinet, or if he is unarmored, grab him by the hair or by the right arm from behind his shoulder. In this way you will make him fall backwards to the ground.

Plate 23: (45r-c) Counter to 1st Student

This is the counter to the previous play, and that play will not work when this counter is quickly applied as follows: when he grabs you from behind you quickly switch hands on the reins, and with your left hand you lock him up as shown here.

Plate 24: (45r-d) 2nd Student

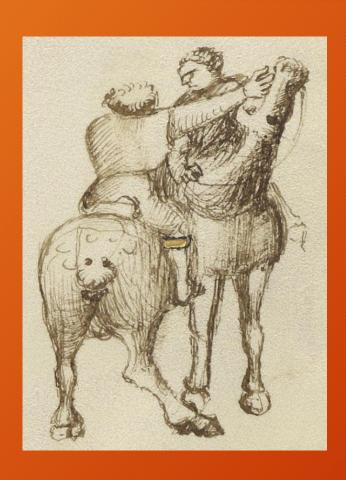

This student is about to throw his opponent off his horse, by grabbing the stirrup and pulling it upwards. If his opponent does not fall to the ground, he'll be helpless in the air, and unless his opponent is tied to his horse, this play will not fail him. If he does not have his foot in the stirrup, the student can grab him by the ankle and raise him up into the air in the same way, as I described above.

Plate 25: (45v-a) Counter to 2nd Student

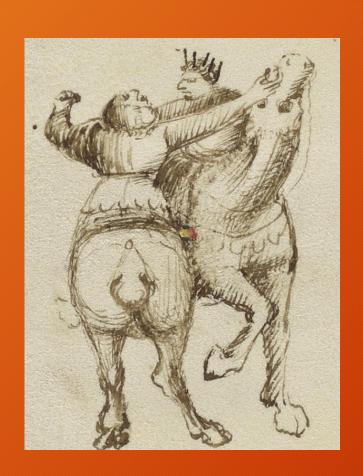

Here is the counter to the previous play: when your opponent grabs your stirrup or your foot, throw your arm quickly around his neck, and in this way you will be able to unhorse him. Follow this advice and he'll end up on the ground for sure.

Plate 26: (45v-b) 3rd Student

This is a method of throwing your opponent to the ground by throwing his horse. It's done like this: when you and your mounted opponent close, ride to his right side. Then throw your right arm over the neck of his horse, and grab the bridle close to where the bit enters its mouth, and forcefully wrench it upwards and over. At the same time make sure your horse's shoulders drive into his horse's haunches. In this way you will bring down both him and his horse at the same time.

Plate 27: (45v-c) Counter to 3rd Student

This is the counter to the play before, where you throw your opponent to the ground together with his horse. This is an easy counter: when the student throws his arm over the neck of your horse to grab the bridle, you should quickly throw your arm around the student's neck, and you will effectively make him let go. Just do as the drawing shows.

Plate 28: (45v-d) 4th Student

In this play you take the reins of your opponent's horse out of his hands, as you see drawn here. When you and your mounted opponent close, ride to his right side, and throw your right arm over his horse's neck and grab the reins near his left hand with your right hand turned down. Now pull the reins over his horse's head. This play is safer to do in armor than unarmored.

Plate 29: (46r-a) Three Opponents

Here are three opponents who wish to kill this Master. The first intends to strike underhand, and he holds his spear at the mid-point. The second carries his lance couched and fully extended. The third intends to throw his spear. They've agreed that no one will make more than one strike each. They've also agreed to take turns.

Plate 30: (46r-b) Boars Tooth/Tusk Guard

Attack me one after another if you choose, because I'm not going anywhere. I'm ready and waiting for you in the Boar's Tusk guard. When the spear is launched against me, whether held tightly or thrown from the hand, I quickly advance my right foot off the line and step crosswise with my left foot, and beat aside the spear that comes to strike me. Even if I were attacked a thousand times, my defense would never fail me. What I can do with my winged spear, I could also do with a staff or a sword. Likewise I could also use the defense I make against the spear, against a sword or staff. My plays are shown next.

Plate 31: (46r-c) 1st Student

This is the play of the Master who waits with his winged spear in the Boar's Tusk guard, for an attack from the three on horseback. To do this play he steps off line and beats aside his opponent's spear. And even if my opponent may know this play, I'll show him my spear is so fast that I can strike my opponent with either thrusts or cuts against his head.

Plate 32: (46r-d) 2nd Student

This is another play made by the Master above, who waits in the Boar's Tusk guard. In his place I'll show this play instead of the previous: if he beats aside my spear with his spear, I rotate my spear and strike him with the butt, which is capped with well-tempered steel.

Plate 33: (46v-a) Remedy Master

This Master has bound one end of a strong rope to his horse's saddle, and the other end to the butt of his lance. First he strikes his opponent, then he will cast the lance to the left side of his opponent, over his opponent's left shoulder, and in this way he can drag his opponent from his horse.

Plate 34: (46b-c)

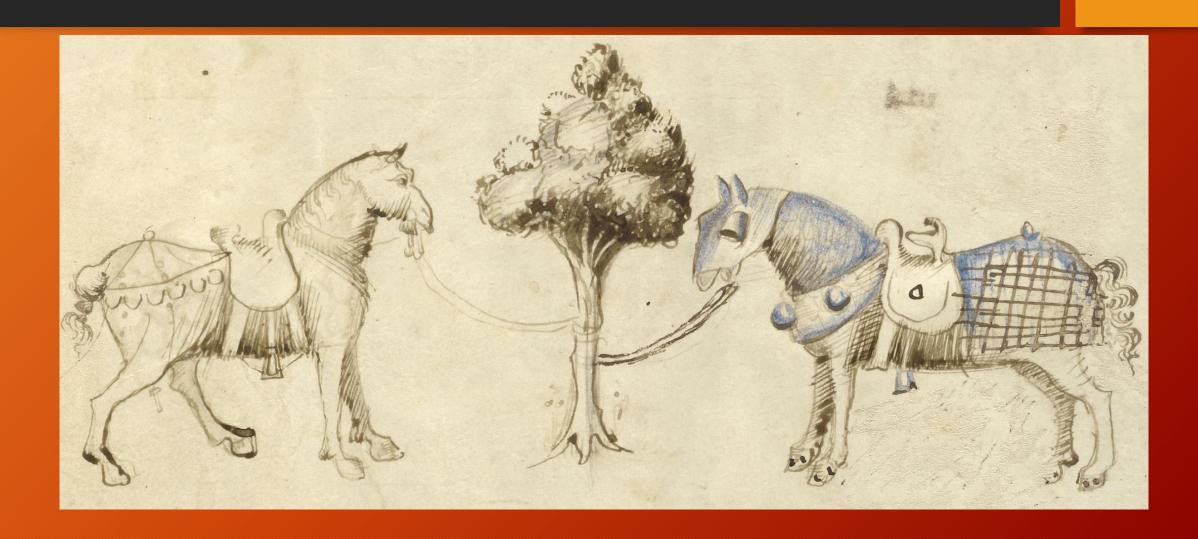

This scoundrel was fleeing from me towards a castle. I rode so hard and fast at full rein that I caught up with him near to his castle. And I struck him with my sword in his armpit, which is a difficult area to protect with armor. Now I withdraw to avoid retaliation from his friends.

Plate 35: (46v-d)

Here ends this book that was written by Fiore the scholar, who has published here everything he knows about this art, that is to say, everything he knows about armed fighting is contained within this book. This same Fiore has named his book "The Flower of the Battle". Let he for whom this book was made be forever praised, for his nobility and virtue have no equal, Fiore the Friulian, a simple elderly man, entrusts this book to you.
